CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY
OFFICE OF NATIONAL ESTIMATES

20 July 1970

MEMORANDUM FOR THE DIRECTOR

SUBJECT: National Intelligence Estimates on the Soviet Role in the Middle East, 1965-1970

1. The heavy Soviet presence in the Middle East and the eastern Mediterranean is nowadays a fact of international life, accepted in a sense even by those powers most anxious to limit or contest it. This thought, among others, is conveyed in the long term (and gloomy) view of a recent National Intelligence Estimate:

"Moscow's assumption of a leading role in the area is a significant and probably durable accomplishment... Even in the event of another Arab-Israeli war and another defeat for major Soviet clients, the Soviets would almost certainly retain some sort of position in the area...and would continue to have a voice in the shaping of postwar configurations. With or without such a war, the political climate of the region is likely to remain generally turbulent. Radical nationalist forces will continue to work against Western interests and in their endeavors will no doubt continue to find Soviet support... In any case, the rivalry between the US and the USSR in the Mediterranean is likely to persist at least so long as the contest between them continues in the world at large."*
